Diane McPhail

"Creativity is our divine birthright; our problem comes in its limitation."

In addition to her extensive experience as a painter, McPhail was Director of Ariel Gallery at Tula in Atlanta for nine years. She has served as curator in several major regional exhibitions. She designed and directed the outpatient art therapy program for Northside Hospital in Atlanta. Her work is in prestigious collections, from regional to international, from Emory University to Halle Berry. She has more than twenty years' experience teaching privately, in workshops, for the Atlanta College of Art, and for the Academy of the Bascom Center for the Visual Arts in Highlands, NC.

Diane's thirteen-figure experimental installation, penetralia, was commissioned as a sculpture garden for the center of Lenox Park in Atlanta and is featured in Keith Smith's definitive text on artists' books, The Structure of the Visual Book, revised edition. She recently returned from Winter Park, FL, where she was one of four artists chosen to participate in a symposium on art and spirituality with internationally renowned theologian, Marcus Borg. She works, teaches, and leads retreats from her studio in Highlands, where she lives year-round.

I am passionate not only about the country but the people and would love the opportunity to introduce you to Round Hill, as well as Jamaica.
